Chapter 1: The Broken Wall

It was a snowy day in Air Base Chicago, when we got orders to load and prepare our vehicles for Operation Spearhead.

Our Captain said, "We're gonna bust there balls in a few hours boys, get ready."

It was December and cold. Our boots froze in this wilderness and we were carrying 60 pounds of food, water, first-aid, ammunition and other supplies. It was supposed to last us until we took the Eastern district of the enemies wall and got our supply drops in the town square. That was the plan at least...things can go wrong, can't they? I ask myself everyday about the answer to that question, but I refuse to give up.

"Get on the transport, men!"

We were being loaded on transport planes, flown over the Eastern district and paraded 3,000 feet in the air. Our artillery boys are already over there, ripping them from the outside the wall. Rockets, mortars, missiles, you name it.

"Here's the plan," Said the Lieutenant, "We're going to aid the 74th once we make land fall. Our artillery units have already pounded them to shreds and our tanks of the 104th will land before us. They will blow a big hole in that wall and our troops can slip through. The 67th Ranger Battalion will climb ropes up the side walls to eliminate the military presence on the walls. We will make landfall in 0130 hours."

"DO I MAKE MYSELF CLEAR!"

"Sir yes, sir."

It was 1:13 a.m. and I was feeling drowsy. My close friend, Ramirez said, "Take some whiskey, it'll pucker you up."

I drank that bottle clean when Ramirez said, "Don't drink it all, you'll get sick."

I didn't though, but I really had to pee.

"All right men, remember the rendezvous point, Alpha Charlie. Get to the square ASAP. Kill all hostiles. Any civilian with weapons are clear to engage. Any unarmed civilians will be sent out into the wall after Operations are met and succeeded."

"Sir yes, sir."

We understood the Lieutenant. Me and Ramirez stood behind one another ready for the people in front to drop. I only hope I get out of this alive and see my family again. The "GO" light went from red, to green and we were a go.

One after the other, we dropped to out of our safe haven. Man after man, we dropped out to our imminent deaths only to be saved by a thick cloth. I dropped out fourth and you could feel the air blowing right passed you. I was scared as shit till the end, but I remembered my training.

I looked at my altitude watch and noticed I was 300 feet to the ground. I opened my parachute and I flung myself in the sky. I could see clouds above me and the fighting down below. The tanks have already blown a gateway hole in the front of the door of the wall. Rangers were climbing away, shooting their targets off the top of the wall.

The actual square of the district was a small castle or fort, I should say. It was small and puny compared to our city buildings, but big enough to hold a surprise.

I was close enough to the ground that I could touch my toes on the roof of a building. I landed on it. I quickly unbuckled my parashoot, grabbed my rifle and my pack and moved to the edge of the roof. I peered over to see any hostiles below. This district was probably light defended. I jumped down landing on my ass. I felt embarrassed, but nobody was around so...

I moved around the corner and over a hay bale and around another corner and an intersecting road when I noticed movement around the intersecting corner. I was about to unpin a grenade when I heard...

"Star"

I waited for this person to repeat himself.

"Star...STAR."

"Say texas god damn it."

"Texas" After I said the call sign, I turned around the corner and found Private Ramirez and a marine with there rifles raised.

"Why didn't you say that sooner, Will."

"I was making sure you weren't the enemy."

"Whatever, I got a stray marine from the 74th here, we're taking him with us to that square."

"My buddies were killed once we moved in. Three attackers, two with long swords and one with a musket, ambushed us off a rooftop. Six of my buddies were dead before I fired on the swordsmen. I shot the last one off the roof and moved on. Our radios are mute, so we can't call for backup."

"Alright, I suppose all the enemy foot mobiles are trying to defend the wall. Which means we can reach the square without any trouble." I said.

We ran from house to house, corner to corner, making sure we kept an eye on our surroundings. Once we saw, the fort in the square, we knew we had to search inside and clear out any enemies that might be lurking.

I looked at Ramirez, "We got to clear this place out before the rest of our troop gets here."

We both nodded and with the marine, we ran towards the front of the fort. We kicked open the front door, checking our corners.

"Clear"

We moved through another set of stairs and then another and then another. We eventually reached the top and we could see a birds eye view. Time passed by and we were seeing more of our unit had reached the square to join us. Soon the fighter-bombers came by sending missiles into the next wall and our troops and tanks were marching below us. It seemed the battle was almost ending.

We marked DROP on the square and popped smoke to get the attention of the supply droppers. Several planes came by and we opened those boxes to find KFC in them. No, literally, Colonel Sanders all up in the war.

It soon came dark and we successfully killed off the enemy in the Eastern district. All the civilians left the district peacefully, but weren't happy about it. Either way, Operation Spearhead was a success. Several more divisions of troops and tanks were arriving here and were already attacking the other districts.

Eren, December, Trost District, 0830 hours

It was peaceful day for Eren and his buddies. He woke up to the sound of Mikasa in his bed, tossing and turning. He had to ask himself why the fuck she was in his bed. Then he noticed Armin was naked in his bed too, then out of awkwardness, Armin said, "Notice me Onii-chan." Eren woke up from his nightmare, sweating and crying. Too bad Mikasa was really somewhere else.

Eren got up and put on some clothes. It was cold during this time of the year. He got some breakfast, hot beef and eggs. Since retaking Wall Maria with his super inhuman abilities, more food was possible to farm and more cattle could be raised. It seemed everything was going his way. Except for the fact that the entire monarchy hadn't gotten word yet they had just been invaded.

At 1030 hours, he went to do exercises until his friends got back with the meeting in the Survey Corps HQ. He went into the square and found a horse, he wanted to talk to them too. After ridding to the gate of inner Wall Rose, a civilian was running through the streets like a maniac screaming "IT'S ALL OVER."

Eren rode over and said, "What's the problem, sir."

"Invaders have come and taken the Eastern district of Wall Maria, it's just like several years ago, WE'RE GOING TO LOSE EVERYTHING AGAIN."

Eren said, "Just keep calm, I'll notify the authorities."

Eren rode off on his horse and thought to himself, who would want to attack our wall and who was it. Eren rode off to the Survey Corps HQ to notify them of the new invaders and possibly a new enemy.

Yeah I'm done now. Hey I wish it was longer too, but I'd honestly rather call up an animation studios and ask if they can make this into an anime, so all I have to do is create the storyline.

Tell what you think you rascals, haha that wasn't gay.

If you wanna another chapter, tell me what it should be about. It takes me some inspiration and ideas to get these things going. Peace. (Make War, not education :)
